

MISSING MAN TURNS UP FIREMEN SEARCH IN STABLE RUINS FOR BODY.

James Decker Was Believed to Have Perished With Seventeen Horses in Fire.

James Decker, a young stableman, who was thought to have perished in a fire which consumed seventeen horses at No. 411 West Fifty-fourth street, showed up alive to-day and ended the firemen's search through the ruins for his body.

The fire, which destroyed a two-story frame stable, imperiled adjoining buildings and drove many families to the street, also forced five families to escape by the roof of No. 411, which was walled down by many streams until a rescue could be effected.

Frank Decker, owner of the stable, believing his brother had perished, imported the firemen to search for him. They did so at considerable risk. In the three-story frame building at No. 411 Owen McKenna and Bernard Walsh were sleeping in a room on the top floor, and Joseph McMann, the grocer's eighteen-year-old son, started upstairs to arouse them. He crossed McKenna and led him down a rear staircase to the grocery store. Then he went back for Walsh. But Walsh had already inhaled smoke and was dazed and helpless.

McMann had only time to drag Walsh's head close to an open window and then take flight himself to get out of the room and hallway, thickly filled with smoke. Two ladders were shot up at the rear of the building and men with axes tore out the window sash and were able to drag the half-stiffed Walsh out.

The cause of the fire could not be determined. The damage amounts to $10,000.
